

THE MORNING APPEAL.

SATURDAY FEBRUARY 8

MRS. COOPER AND DR. BROWN

The courageous attitude of Mrs. Sarah Cooper of San Francisco in the controversy in her church over the character of Dr. Brown commends itself to all lovers of the truth.

Brown, a teacher of morality and religion, is detected in a very ordinary liaison with a member of his flock. The facts connected with the case leave no room whatever for doubt of the man's guilt. Yet with the brazen assurance of his class he tries to face down the truth and has finally induced his blind adherents to pass resolutions of confidence in his character. People who will pass a resolution of confidence in Brown, after the publication of the Overman letter, are either deficient in ordinary perception or tarred with the same stick.

Mrs. Cooper would not vote for such resolutions, and took the platform without mincing matters and told the audience why. She was too square a woman to assist in whitewashing a libertine and hypocrite and her stand has brought down on her head, white with the snows of years, the wrath of Mrs. Brown and other women in the church.

She was abused like a street walker and her only daughter alluded to as "a rock-marked, freckle-faced creature." To run around nights and make assignments with the pastor calls for no reproach from the ladies who are close to Brown, but to have the misfortune to be freckle-faced or to contract smallpox as Mrs. Cooper's daughter did, while ministering to the sick, is regarded as a life subject for public taunts and insults.

Mrs. Cooper's life has been one of devotion to principle, a life of blamelessness and purity; a life spent in teaching the world of the Master and ministering to the minds of the young. No man who has ever known Mrs. Sarah Cooper of San Francisco, or heard her preach, would say that he believed his own mother was any better so man; and yet Brown, liar, hypocrite and libertine, with past and present nasty scandals clinging to his person, manages to induce a majority of his congregation to side with him against Mrs. Cooper.

When the lady says that she will present indubitable proof of the man's guilt before the investigating committee, ninety-nine people in one hundred in San Francisco know that she tells the truth.

THE TWO SHERMANS

Col. L. L. Polk related the following incident in one of his speeches in Georgia:

A man in Washington said to me: "Did not Gen. Sherman cause great damage to the Southern people?" "Yes," said Col. Polk. "And great suffering?" "Yes."

"Don't you people entertain a very bitter feeling toward him?"

"A great many do," replied Col. Polk, "but Gen. Sherman was engaged in legitimate war. He cut a swath through that God-favored land fifty miles wide and five-hundred miles long, and left nothing but death and ashes to mark his track. I stood in my house night after night and saw the horizon lit up with the lurid flames of burning dwellings and ghettos. But he left us, and we were left to recuperate. But I want to say that there is another man named Sherman in this country who inflicted ten thousand fold more suffering upon the people than every Tecumseh did. You find his work at every hotel. At the fireside of every laboring man you find the withering effects of John Sherman's financial policy."—Southern Mercury.

Harry Sargent the once wealthy theatrical manager has just died in absolute want in London. He brought out Madam Modjeska and made $200,000 on her. He had to borrow a plug hat to call on her when he made the first contract. With wealth he got the big head and then deserted his wife. After this act of perfidy Madam Modjeska sided with the injured wife and would no longer play under Sargent's management. Recognizing the fact, however, that she was indebted a good deal to Sargent for her first success in America, she has always provided for Mrs. Sargent. Had he stuck by his wife with the same fidelity that Modjeska has shown to her, he would not have died in an English poor house. Decency pays in the long run.

There are all sorts of ways of making political capital. One of the poorest is to misstate facts. The Enterprise yesterday denounces editor Nixon of Winemucca as a "base hireling of Wall street." It is only recently that the Enterprise began to run a campaign humor column and it is certainly entertaining.
